Section A

Answer Question 01.

Source A

From a pamphlet produced by the German Communist Party in 1931 and aimed at the working class.

Working comrades!

You are suffering! Brüning, in the service of big business, is slashing wages so that more money can flow into the pockets of the rich. Millions of workers are thrown out of work and denied the vital necessities of life. Help for the unemployed and war pensions are being reduced so that the wealthy can get wealthier. You want bread, work and freedom. These 5 will not come from Brüning; you must struggle for it yourselves. You call for a people's war against poverty. In numerous strikes, National Socialist and SPD-supporting workers have fought alongside Communist workers against reduced wages whilst their leaders called for an end to the strikes, standing on the side of Brüning!

Source B

From an article by Daniel Binchy, the Irish Ambassador to Weimar Germany, September 1932.

Brüning became Chancellor at a time of great economic emergency, which, with its disastrous consequences for finance and politics, threatened to wreck the whole structure of German civilisation. His partnership with President Hindenburg was based on mutual trust; both were distrustful of the Socialists and anxious to dam the rising tide of radicalism, whether Nazi or Communist. Brüning's necessary plan for restoring 5 financial order, involving cuts in wages and social services, was rejected by the Socialists, mainly through fear of losing votes to the Communists, forcing the use of emergency decree. Brüning steered Germany through the two most difficult winters and warded off what seemed to be inevitable financial disaster without damaging the framework of social services. 10
